

Outreach Templates

Two examples that don't read as templates — written to sound like a real person, not a mass message.

Both examples below are single first-contact messages — not a sequence. Each one is built around a genuinely specific, researched detail about the prospect, because that's what separates a real message from a template with a name swapped in. The bracketed sections are the only parts you should change; everything else is deliberately written the way a careful person actually writes, not how a marketing tool writes.

These are starting points, not guarantees. No message style here is certain to get a reply or win a client — treat these as a foundation to adapt in your own voice.

What makes outreach sound human

Avoid	Do instead
"Dear Sir/Madam" or no name at all	Use their actual first name — if you don't have it, you're not ready to send yet
"I hope this email finds you well"	Open with the specific thing you noticed about them
"We guarantee results" / "10x your revenue"	Name one concrete thing you can help with, nothing more
"I've been following your amazing work for years"	Reference one real, recent, checkable detail instead of vague praise
A long pitch covering every service you offer	One idea, one ask, under 120 words

TEMPLATE 1 Noticed-something-specific opener

CONTEXT / WHEN TO USE

Use when you've found one real, recent, specific detail about the prospect's business — a post, an update, a launch, a visible change — and can connect it naturally to a narrow service you offer.

THE MESSAGE

Hi [FIRST NAME],

I noticed [SPECIFIC DETAIL — e.g. "your post last week about switching to a new booking system" / "that [BUSINESS NAME] just launched the new product line"] — [ONE SHORT, GENUINE REACTION, e.g. "that's a solid move given how much manual scheduling eats into a day"].

I help [TYPE OF BUSINESS] with [SPECIFIC SERVICE, e.g. "cleaning up and automating the kind of repetitive admin work that comes with a new system like that"]. Not pitching anything big — just flagging it because it's directly relevant to what you just mentioned.

If it's useful, happy to send over a quick example of what that could look like for [BUSINESS NAME] specifically — no obligation either way.

[YOUR NAME]

PERSONALIZATION POINTS — must change every time

- [FIRST NAME] and [BUSINESS NAME] — the actual prospect, not a placeholder left in.
- [SPECIFIC DETAIL] — something true and recent you actually observed about them, not a generic industry statement.
- [SPECIFIC SERVICE] — phrased in terms of their specific situation, not your full service list.

WHY THIS WORKS

- Opens with a specific, checkable observation instead of a generic compliment — a reader can tell this wasn't copy-pasted.
- States the help in one sentence, tied directly to the thing just mentioned, rather than listing every service offered.
- The ask is small and low-pressure ("if it's useful") rather than demanding a call immediately.
- No urgency language, no claims of guaranteed results, no fake enthusiasm.

TEMPLATE 2 Specific-gap opener

CONTEXT / WHEN TO USE

Use when you've reviewed something public of theirs (a page, a listing, a product description) and found one concrete, fixable gap you could help with — not a vague "you could be doing more online".

Hi [FIRST NAME],

Quick one — I was looking at [SPECIFIC THING, e.g. "the [PRODUCT/PAGE] on your site" / "your recent [LAUNCH/ANNOUNCEMENT]"] and noticed [ONE SPECIFIC, SPECIFIC OBSERVATION, e.g. "there's no clear next step for someone who lands there from a search" / "the description doesn't mention [SPECIFIC DETAIL CUSTOMERS USUALLY ASK ABOUT]"].

I do [YOUR SERVICE] for [TYPE OF BUSINESS], and that's exactly the kind of gap I usually end up fixing. Could be a quick win.

Would it be worth a short message back and forth to see if it's relevant for you, or should I leave it here?

[YOUR NAME]

PERSONALIZATION POINTS — must change every time

- [FIRST NAME] and the specific thing you looked at ([PRODUCT/PAGE] / [LAUNCH/ANNOUNCEMENT]).
- [SPECIFIC OBSERVATION] — must be something you actually checked, not assumed.
- [YOUR SERVICE] / [TYPE OF BUSINESS] — worded to match their actual business type, not a generic category.

WHY THIS WORKS

- Leads with a concrete observation about their actual business, not a templated opener.
- Names one specific gap rather than implying everything is wrong — this reads as helpful, not critical.
- Explicitly offers an easy out ("or should I leave it here") — this reduces pressure and often increases replies, since it doesn't corner the reader.
- No mention of price, no claim about results, no multi-step pitch — single idea, single ask.

These are two standalone first-contact messages. Deciding how and when to follow up after no reply is intentionally a separate topic, covered in more depth at the next tier.

No outreach wording guarantees a reply or a client. Treat these as a tested starting structure to adapt honestly to your own voice and your own research on each prospect.
