

Your First AI Service

An offer-framing worksheet — turn a general skill into one specific, sellable service.

"I do AI stuff" is not an offer — it gives a prospect nothing to say yes to. This worksheet turns a general skill into one specific, nameable service a first-time freelancer can actually pitch. Work through the five steps in order, writing directly in the space provided.

Step 1 — Name the repetitive task

What repetitive task have you noticed businesses doing by hand — answering the same questions, writing similar posts, retyping the same kind of document?

Step 2 — Name your actual skill

What AI tool or technique do you already know how to use well enough to rely on — not "AI" in general, but the specific tool or workflow?

Step 3 — Combine them into one sentence

"I help [type of business] with [the specific repetitive task from Step 1], using [the tool/skill from Step 2]." Write your version below.

Step 4 — Give it a name

Turn Step 3 into a short, concrete package name — something a client could repeat back to a colleague. Not "AI consulting." (See the worked examples below for the pattern.)

Step 5 — Define exactly what's delivered

Write down the literal thing the client receives — a file, a working flow, a document, a set of messages. If you can't name the deliverable, the offer isn't specific enough yet.

Worked examples — for the pattern, not to copy word-for-word

Package name	Who it's for	What's actually delivered
AI FAQ Setup	Local service businesses with repetitive phone/DM questions	A working chatbot flow answering their 10 most common customer questions
AI Product Description Pack	Small online sellers with thin or missing product copy	20 product descriptions written in their brand voice, ready to paste in
AI Review-Response Kit	Businesses with many public reviews and no consistent reply habit	A set of ready-to-send response templates, plus a short guide on adapting them
AI Appointment-Reminder Sequence	Service businesses losing money to no-shows	A written reminder email/SMS sequence they load into whatever tool they already use
Meeting-Notes-to-Action-Items Service	Small teams who lose track of what was agreed on calls	A repeatable process turning their call recordings or notes into a clear action list

Your offer, written out

A good first offer is narrow enough to say in one sentence and concrete enough that the client knows exactly what they'll receive. It's fine — expected, even — to narrow or change this offer after your first few real conversations. If you need starting price ranges once your offer is defined, use the companion pricing sheet included in this kit.
